the common resort of members of Congress," bad way of commending the objects of its favor. lings. that members vote themselves money to defray the expenses of liberal indulgences in "wine parties," "oyster suppers" and "harlots," as well as extravagance growing out of guilty intrigues with " beautiful and accomplished women," who form the fashionable society at the Washington hotels, &c., &c.

Now all this is as uncalled for as it is untrue. Unquestionably, among the members of Congress, numbering nearty three hundred, (of both Houses) there are some dissipated men, and men of vicious habits. The same charge would hold good in reference to the same number of men in any other calling in life, and in any other community. Gambling saloons and other dens of vice are not, perhaps, more humerous in Washington, in proportion to size. than in any other city in the Union.

But I regard this point as of less importance than the remedy proposed by the writer of the letter which you publish. He says that the only remedy he can see is to resort to "frequent changes," that "the new member, fresh from the bosom of the people, is a very different man from what he becomes to be after serving a few years in Congress." "He dreams of no frauds to better his fortune," &c.

Now, assuming that men come to Congress imbued with that substantial honesty possessed by the incorruptable masses who send them, and assuming, also, that circumstances govern the honesty of men. I submit that the strongest incentive to uprightness is the certainty of having to be tried every two years before the people. Let a man's official conduct be submitted to the rigid scrutiny of the populace, and he will be careful to make up a good record. On the contrary, let the custom be established that "frequent changes" must take place, and if it has any effect, it will be to generate carelessness, and even recklessness, in legislation. Certainly nothing can be more calculated to lure a man from the path of rectitude, and "make hay while the sun shines," than a knowledge that, at a given time, he is to be ruled out. Do what he may, he must go by the board, though his record be without a

Experience shows that this is true. In all of the non-slave holding States, the doctrine of " rotation " is rigidly enforced, in reference to members of Congress. It is very rare that a man is allowed to serve longer than four years: and, as a general rule, the tenure is confined to | FERRUARY 23, 1857. a single Congress. There, honesty and fidelity have nothing to do in regulating the number of years a man serves. This victous system of Atlantic coast of the United States.

Sweet mountain blossom, peeping forth, Amid the din of city line,

With gentle thronging mem'rans rife,

The bright land where I was a child.

The bright land-Heaven scarce seems to me

More radiant than that lovely clime,

Than to my heart its streamlets shine

Thy soft green leaf's familiar tipt,

Has wakened in my weary sen!

Painting unto my spirit's eye

A rushing tide of visons wild,

The wave of endless life more clear

A lated of mountain, rock and steep,

O'er shading wales as Eden fair,

Long, long ago, the cares of life,

Swept o'er my soul a fiery flood,

The blasted harvest of the past

As fresh as delicate and fair,

As in the forest's dim arcades

In sylvan low-liness bedight,

They opened to the softened light

And how this mild, warm air recalls

When by the singing brooklet clear,

A guileless, dreaming, happy child

I sought thy dewy blue bells oft

6h ! could I see thre once again,

Of trust in every human thing,

But no! the blissful time is past,

May bloom awhite, but cannot wear

Yet memories of that fairy time.

With money gray rocks piled above

With tangled curis upon my brow,

As seeks my heart for nothing now.

Amid the wood, bloom by the brook,

Methinks my saddened, eare-worn heart

Might learn again the lesson sweet

And childhood's happy dreams repeat.

The heart, unlike the wild-wood flower,

The glory that is childhood's dower;

With carnest, daily work well dute,

May shed a sweetness o'er the path

Till the blest home beyond is won.

The form and wind flower's sheltered mock

The spring time rambles in the wood,

On whose green margin thick we stood

T. bisom as in life's rosy dawn.

And overarched with skips methinks

That ne'er a frown on cloud did wear

Its bitter jessons, blighting griefs

And seared its early golden sheafs

But thou, sweet little green-wood gem,

How strange it seems on this bare spot,

Scorched by the rays reflected bold

From towering walls of brick and stone,

To see thy wee bells part the mold,

Wast waksned up this sun-bright morn,

Mr. William Williamson showed to us a day or two since a specimen of gold embedded in quart, brought from New Mexico. It was obtained at the foot of the mountains thirty miles south of Santa Fe, on the road to Albuquerque, nor discussed in the Select Committee. As to sweeny, when the clerk read to him his testifmony, he stated that such parts an he desired to emit were mere loose conversations in which he was trying to beg off from giving testimony.
